Marc Held
Let's dream of another city I
1998, 100 pages, 12x18 cm
French designer and "visionary" architect, Marc Held draws his thoughts on an urban world that is more dense, more intensive, more directly. A world that embodies the "values" of a concerned and distinctive society, ready to above anything to renew its horizon. Refusing to see this evolution as inevitable, the author traces the ...

Jack Gould
Born from the Walls
1998, 100 pages, 12x18 cm
The story begins in September 1941. As a prisoner of war camp in Château, not far from the Adriatic coast, nearly west of Rome, where young British officers were detained. Jack Gould was first held in the camp and then, after an escape of a few months, he was recognized and transferred to a camp in Germany where he would die...

Ratines de Côte
ISBN 978-2-916264-17-2, 24€
As Ratines lives in Côte at the end of the Brittany embankments. Marc Held makes the protected terrains of the Côte childhood, and the revelation of a new open world through the confrontation of the domestic at the French high school. Then his "discovery" of Egypt where he remained, where, after the rechristening of the River Nile and the war that took place in the ...

Charles Mingus
Love Theme for Big
1998, 100 pages, 12x18 cm
To be born from a dog is, says Charles Mingus, to be black and a pure minority in a white America that only knows the indifference or contempt of the black community to pleasure its cultural values. It is, when confronted with artifice and violence, with dissonance, to understand very quickly that, if one does not accept to bend to aesthetic codes ...

Billie Holiday
Lady Sings the Blues
1998, 100 pages, 12x18 cm
"One and women were children at their wedding, he was eighteen, she was sixteen. I had three. When we started as a maid for white people. When they found out she was pregnant, they kicked her out. She'd never about had a child when she lived out. They were proper people who had never ..."

Jeanne Moreau
My Soul Is So Full
1998, 100 pages, 12x18 cm
"In the moments of my memory, closed doors open and buried moments are revived. A word, a forgotten picture, a look from my father and a detail of daily life, long and forgotten, come back to life and transport me to the joy or sadness they carry within them, more than they did at my moment. In this ..."

New Landscapes
1998, 100 pages, 12x18 cm
The journey of the "lands of childhood" proposed in the book, from New York to Siberia, from Bulgaria to India, from Norway to Ireland, from Italy to England, from Paris to Moscow, definitely opens space and time. All the action in these consultancy projects, in one form or another, have written about the moral or urban landscapes of their ...

Marc Helaine
The Madeline
1998, 100 pages, 12x18 cm
"I loved the colors and enjoyed the facile sensations provided in the memory of a child's nose, dimmed of the smells of a last nuclear weapon, Acetone, and of a nose so less sensitive, more or less dulcified parental environment. I discovered (unconsciously) and the Caucasus in this way without having set foot there..."
